SELF-CRUCIFIED

The Awful Story of a Religious Fanatic in Ventec.

DROVE NAILS INTO HIS FLESH.

Wonderful Ingenuity in IIIs Sets Torture. How He Got on the Cross-A Net Over the Apparatus to Held Him if He Fell. Made Two Attemptant Self-Destruction

Boston Traveler: This is a remarkable story, well attested historically, and ible of doubt, of a man who crucified himself; who, in a plous frenzy miated as well as he was able the death of Christ eighteen hundred years cified himself; who, in a plous fremy, emulated as well as he was able the death of Christ eighteen hundred years before, and whose terrible wounds, added to his refusal to take food, were responsible for his death.

At the beginning of this century there lived at Casala, in the territory of Belluno, Italy, a man named Matthew Lovat. He was the son of poor parents and was at first employed in the coarsest and most laberious works of husbandry. In this manual toil his imagination became fired with the case and comfort of the lives of the restor and his curate, who were the only persons in the village who did not absolutely work with their hands. Matthew thought it would be a fine idea, therefore, to study for the priesthood and become a gentleman; so he induced the kind-hearted curate to take him for tuition. He learned to read and write a little, but his family was so poor that further study was impossible, and he was obliged to renounce his books and turn to the trade of shoemaking.

Lovat hated shoemaking, and he never became a good workman. The sedentary life and the silence to which apprentices were then condemned made him tachura and gloomy. An extreme of religious devotion began to distinguish him, and he received the scorn and ridicule of the young people of his native village.

At last, wearled of their taunts, he decided to go to Venice, and on November 13, 1802, he arrived in that wonderful city and went to seek his brother, Angelo, who was employed by the house of a widow named Osgualda, who lived in the street Le Visido, No. 575. He remained there until September 21 of the following year, on which day he made an attempt to crucify himself in the middle of the street called the Cross of Bril upon a frame which he had constructed from the timber of his bed. That was a little too much for the widow Osgualdi, and she elected Matthew forwith. He affectward got lodgings in the third floor of a house occupied by Valentia Luccheta, near the Church of St. Aloise, in the street Delis Monsche, No. 2888. For so sane.

In July, 1805, however, the old idea of self-crucifixion came back to Lovat with increased strength. He worked a little every day on the instrument of his torture, and collected malls, ropes, bands and a crown of thorns. As he foresaw that it would be extremely difficult to fasten himself, securely upon the cross, he made a net of small cords capable of supporting his weight, in case he should happen to diamazaa himself from it.

An Ingenious Device.

This net he secured at the bottom by fastening it in a knot at the lower ex-tremity of the perpendicular beam, a tremity of the perpendicular beam, a little below the bracket designed to support his feet, and the other end was stretched to the extremities of, the transverse spar, which formed the arms of the cross, so that it had the appearance in front of a purse turned upside down. From the middle of the upper extremity of the net, thus placed, proceeded one rope and from the point at which the two spars formed the cross intersected each other, a second rope proceeded, both of which were firmly tied to a beam in the inside of the chamber, immediately above the window, of which the parapet was very low, and the length of these ropes was just sufficient to allow the cross to rest horisontally upon the ficor of the apartment.

and the length of these ropes was just sufficient to allow the cross to rest horisontally upon the floor of the apartment.

On July 19 all Lovat's horrible preparations were complete, and he determined to end the matter on that day. He proceeded to put on his crown of thorns several of which pierced the skin of his forehead. Then he bared his body, wrapping only a cloth about the loins. Next, passing his legs between the net and the cross, seating hisself upon it, he took one of the nails destined for his hands and drove it into the left palm by striking its head on the floor until it appeared through the back of the hand. He now adjusted his feet to the bracket which had been prepared to receive them, the right over the left. Taking another nail five inches long and placing it on the upper foot with his left hand, he drove it with a mallet which he held in his right until it not only penetrated both his feet, but, entering the hole prepared for it in the bracket, made its way so far through the tree of the cross as to fasten the victim firmly to it. He planted the third heal in his right hand, as he had managed of the cross as to fasten the victim firmly to it. He planted the third heal in his right hand, as he had managed with regard to the left, and having bound himself by the waist to the perpendicular of the cross by a cord which he had previously stretched under him he made a wound in his left side with a shoemaker's knife.

Matthew's bloody and awful preliminaries having been accomplished, it was necessary for the delided wretch to get himself and his cross out of the window so that he might be exhibited to the public gase, which he deemed an important part of his plan. In carrying this out he displayed the most marvelous ingenuity. The cross was laid upon the foon horizontally, its lower extremity resting upon the points of his fingers (for the nails did not allow him to use his whole hand either open or closed), he made several springs forward, until the portion of the cross which was very low; so, rai mained suspended outside of the house by the ropes, which were secured to the bram in the inside. In this predicament Lovat stresched his hands to the extremities of the transverse beam which formed the arms of the cross, to insert the nalls into the holes, which last beem prepared for them; but whether it was out of his power to fix both, or whether he was obliged to use the right in some concluding operation, the fact is, that when he was seen by the people who pussed in the street, with only his left hand nailed to the cross, while his right hung parallel to his body, on the outside of the net. It was then $0 'clock in the morning.

Immediately there was intense com-nottion in Venice. The news spread mottion in Venice. The news spread like lightning that a man had crucified like lightning that a man had crucified himself in the wiseet of Delle Monache, and crowds flocked thither to witness the gruesome and suggestive sight. It was not long before some humane persons rushed upstains and rescued Lovat from his terrible position, disengaging him from the cross. A doctor named Ruggleri was #peedily summoned, and when he arrived life seemed all but extinct. His situation demanded the most prompt relief. Accordingly Dr. Ruggerieri had the man conveyed by water to the Imperial Clinical school in the hospital of St. Luke, and St. John. "Alasi I am very unfortunate." was all the patient said during the whole journey.

But spile of his awful wounds and the great shock to this nervous syswhole journey.

But spite of his awful wounds and the great shock to his nervous system. Lovat did not die at that time. He lay at the hospital about a month, and under careful treatment began to mend. "I interrogated him several times," says Dr. Ruggerfert, "relative to the motive which had induced him to crucify himself, and he always made me this answer: "The pride of man must be mortified, it must expire on the cross." Thinking that he might be restrained by the presence of my pupils, I returned repeatedly to the subject when with him alone, and he always answered me in the same terms. He was, in fact, so deeply persuaded that the Supreme Will had imposed upon him the obligation of dying upon the cross that he wished to inform the Tribunal of Justice of the destiny which it behooved him to fulfill."

In August he was removed to the St. Servole Lunatic Asylum, and there he began a series of wilful fast that, to rether with his weakened constitution and consumptive tendencies, resulted in his death not long after.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 20.—Edward Evans, of Shanghal, China, who was among the passengers on the steamer Gaelic, says that Li Hung Chang, the eminent viceroy, now on his way to Moscow to attend the coronation of the case, took with him on his trip a casket in which he expects to be buried when he dies.

"It is not an unusual thing for Chinese to buy their own coffins and keep them in their houses the same as any other article of furniture until they shuffle off the mortal coli," he said.

To carry a coffin with oneself on a long journey to guard against any inconveniences in case of death may seem ridiculous to Americans, but that Li Hung Chang has done this I know to be a fact. I have the story from a missionary in China who was engaged by Li Hung Chang to accompany him on the yoyage, but who gave up the trip at the last moment.

OAKLAND, Cal., April 20.—A lunatic with a gun cleared out nearly all the worshippers in the First Unitarian church last night. The mad man, who gave the name of Louis Porter, went into the church as soon as service commenced and took a seat alongside the alsie, about half way towards the altar. His nervous manner and peculiar actions engaged the attention of several members of the congregation from the first. At the conslusion of the hymn the lunatic arose from a sent and walked down the aisie until he reached the altar. As he walked down he said in a loud-voice: "This thing is all a farce. It is a humbug, Now I want to have my say and it won't be well for any-body to attempt to stop me."

As Porter finished speaking he drew a revolver but was quickly disarmed. The lunatic was turned over to a policeman and the service was continued.

The City of Washington is an object of perannial inferest to all patriotic Americans. Not alone because it is the great throbbing heart of the mightiest and grandest republic the earth has ever known, but also on account of its material magnifecence. All Americans take pride in its beautiful avenues, majestic architecture, stately hones, and well stored galleries and musetims as things of grandeur and beauty in themselves, apart from the historic interest with which they are invested. It is a hope and aspiration of all "Young America," at least, at some time or other to visit the capital of his country. The Baltimore & Ohio railroad offers unequalled facilities in aid of this desire by inaugurating a series of popular excursions at reduced rates. A number of persons from this section have availed themselves of these excursions and found the train service and other arrangements in keeping with the liberal polloy of the Baltimore & Ohio.
